From the WASHINGTON FEDERALIST.

An Address to the Inhabitants of Montgomery County, Maryland—by their fellow-citizen,

Charles H. W. Wharton.

NUMBER—IV.

The next objectionable feature of the existing administration is the appointment of Mr. Gallatin. To this appointment a variety of objections present themselves, but to avoid prolixity, I will confine myself to two. First, Mr. Gallatin is a foreigner, as such, will it be contended that he has as great a claim to participate in the first offices of our government, as the natives themselves? This claim can be founded only upon the ignorance or incapacity of the natives themselves. If among the large majority of the democrats which the leaders of that faction so proudly boast of no native could be found capable of filling that office which a foreigner now holds; if such be the mean and degraded state of democratic intellect, or of what they call the Sovereign People, then the appointment can be justified on the ground of necessity; and then it will become the interest of the United States, to offer her most lucrative offices to foreigners, to encourage the importation of Genevan and Irish Patriots. But is there a genuine American who will admit this to be the case? Is there a genuine American, who will acknowledge his countrymen to be a pack of blockheads? Impossible! And yet, how can the appointment be advocated, except on the above assumed ground? I know it has been said, that sound policy dictates to us to encourage as much as possible, the emigration of foreigners into our country? I know that has received the sanction of some very illustrious names; but with due deference, I must confess I think the opinion fallacious. Who are the foreigners that generally settle among us? The very outcasts from Europe—Reptiles escaped from impending justice—Convicts from a dungeon—The convicted Irish—and the revolutionizing Frenchman. I mean not to cast a reflection upon the national character of either people: nor would I have it inferred that the portrait implies without many exceptions. There are foreigners whom I respect—foreigners who have rendered services to this country, and deserve the thanks of the American people; but the fact is undeniably true, that the great bulk of emigrants who come over to this country, are so removed from civilization—so astonishingly savage in their deportment, that one is really led to regard them as a species, below even the Hottentots—nay sometimes almost to doubt whether they are a branch of the human family. Now from the introduction of characters like these, what benefit I ask is to result to the nation? Point it out, and my argument falls to the ground. It had been anticipated that these men would have been ferocious in cultivating our lands, in clearing our uninhabitable forests—and in draining our swamps. But has this been the case? Do we find that the vast hordes of united Irishmen and others who are continually flocking in upon us, betake themselves to agricultural pursuits? No, my friends they concern not with these things. They infect our towns—our seaports swarm with them—and the morals of our people become corrupted. Scarcely emerged from a state of ignorance inferior to that of the savage of our wilds, they no sooner set their foot upon American ground than they begin an attack upon our government. Neither talents or virtue afford a shield of protection, against their foul calumny and invective. With hands still warm and reeking with the blood of their best fellow citizens, they dare to make sacrifices at the Temple of Liberty and set up a claim to the exercise of every privilege which government guarantees to its own citizens. Relieved and flattered at home, they can bear no restraint upon their conduct, but with unparalleled impudence dare to dictate to the councils of our nation.

Ever foremost in intrigue, it is on the ground of an election that you see the foreigner in his native shape. No man is so busy as himself; none so ready to find fault; none so solicitous in the success of his candidate as he is; and none I may venture to assert so eager, to make black appear white to you, as this illustrious son of some enervated or savage people!

What impudence! And yet it is from these foreigners; these precious runaways from the gallows; these oppressed sons of humanity, as Mr. Jefferson emphatically calls them, that the politics of our country are to obtain their complexion; our legislatures are to be dictated to; and we to receive with humility the maxims of policy and government. Such characters may indeed teach us that governments, are only unnecessary restraints upon the conduct of mankind; that rebellion against them is therefore just; that each one having a claim upon the good things of this life, robbery is no crime, and that adultery, which crafty priests have hitherto taught us to condemn, is but a necessary 'exertion of the energies of population.' These my countrymen are some of the advantages which we shall experience from the introduction of foreigners; but what other we shall be likely to derive from this motley crew, I have really yet to learn.

I return from this digression. I have been imperceptibly led into a greater length than I expected, in order to refute the opinion so very generally received, that it is the sound policy of this country to encourage (or promote) the introduction of foreigners into it. I maintain that sound policy dictates a step directly the reverse; and whilst this rage for inviting them hither continues, America is taking to her bosom reptiles, which, invigorated by the genial rays of freedom, will dart the venomous poison into that very bosom which warmed and nourished them. I trust I have proven the impolicy of appointing Mr. Gallatin, on the ground of his being a foreigner: but from the preceding remarks, I would not have it inferred that I am opposed to foreigners under any circumstances whatever, participating in the offices of our government. Far from it. Selfish, indeed, must be that heart, and narrow and contracted the powers of that mind, which would harbor a sentiment like this. When foreigners have resided some time among us; when they have given strong substantial evidences of their attachment to our constitution, and moreover, acquired some property among us; when they have distinguished themselves from their uncivilized countrymen who generally infect our shores, by their orderly conduct—their obedience to the laws—and, when necessary, their ready aid in compelling the execution of them, then, and then only, have they claim to participate in the offices of our government. But in Mr. Gallatin's character do we discover any traits like these? Is he not openly charged in the public prints with having promoted the Western Insurrection? Was he not the secretary of a committee whose intemperate conduct certainly tended to kindle the flame of rebellion in that part of our country, of a committee that entered into a resolution that they would neither eat nor drink, nor hold fellowship with men who advocated the excise law; that they would regard the officers appointed to collect taxes on distillation as their most inveterate enemies, and would spurn them with contempt from their doors? Did he not avail himself of the amnesty act? In a word, what services had he rendered to this country? What patriotic act had he ever performed to entitle him to that distinguished preference above all others, which Mr. Jefferson has shewn him by his appointment? What an insult is this! What! Not an American qualified to fill an office which has been bestowed upon a foreigner openly charged with fomenting an insurrection in the very country whose executive now rewards him with one of her most honorable and important posts! Where was Mr. Nicholas? A gentleman whose understanding as much exceeds Mr. Gallatin's, as the huge Elephant surpasses in size the little Mouse. But even suppose for argument's sake, that Mr. Nicholas would not accept this office, (and I really believe, under existing circumstances he would refuse it,) was it absolutely necessary on this account that it should be bestowed on Mr. Gallatin? I do not suppose Mr. Jefferson would have appointed a Federalist. When two and two make five, and a part is greater than the whole; when the laws of nature themselves shall be reversed, and vicious principles shall be necessary to the production of virtuous actions, then and then only, may we expect Mr. Jefferson will forget his antipathies, and endeavor to do what he now certainly is not; a wise statesman! But, I ask, was it prudent that Mr. Gallatin should be appointed? Was it prudent that the suspected In-urgent—the man who but the other day raised the banner of revolt in our own country—who had unfurled the flag of rebellion, and invited our peaceable citizens under its bloody colors—was it prudent, I say, that a man suspected of all this, should be amongst the first to experience executive patronage in its most bounteous, its most extensive form.

The character of our officers should be above suspicion. They should be free from defect—they should be unfurnished with a blush. The public tranquility demands it. The public interest should therefore be imperative on our president in making his appointments. But whether in this appointment he has consulted that tranquility you my countrymen are able to judge. You will judge—and from a perfect knowledge of your principles, I pronounce judgment for you. You condemn this part of Mr. Jefferson's administration? Need I add any thing more?—Need I enter into an examination of the pretended constitutionality of the repeal of the Judiciary, or the propriety of abolishing the Internal Taxes? This would extend my address to a greater length than I have leisure to carry or you disposition to read it. These subjects have already been ably discussed. And after the light reflected on them by the intrepid and logical Bayard, presumptuous indeed would it be in so young a person as myself to expect to offer any arguments for your consideration which the prolific mind of this luminous statesman has not already suggested. I feel my insufficiency to treat this important subject in a manner that it deserves, and will therefore draw to a conclusion an address which has been written not to obtain popularity but to assign those reasons which have induced me to subscribe myself to the public, a decided Federalist—Reasons which to the virtuous and independent mind will, I trust, appear correct.

HUMOR.

From the London Courier.

SEBASTIANI'S SECOND REPORT.

[As it is possible Colonel Sebastiani will be sent on a Commercial Tour round the British Isles, similar to that he has just finished to Egypt, (see the Advertiser of a few days since) and the Levant, we present the following sketch, by anticipation, of the report he may make to the Chief Consul, if he chooses.]

JULY 3, 1803. Sailed from Calais, and landed at Dover. No good place for landing a French army in this neighbourhood, excepting Dover itself. Visited the castle; foreigners are refused admission. Said I was the Chief Consul's Envoy. Every body bowed to me. The works are not well constructed, and the place might easily be taken.

4th. Went to Deal, a fine beach for running an army on shore in open boats. No fortifications. If we could fend the ships of war in the Downs with our troops to St. Domingo, there would be nothing to oppose a landing. Went on to Pegwell Bay; a fine situation also for running an army on shore, and still less protected than Deal. Travelled to Canterbury; a rich country all the way, and would produce plenty of provisions for troops. Shall certainly station a Commercial Agent on this coast. At Canterbury, and at Rochester, was introduced to ——. They adore the Chief Consul, and assure me, most of the inhabitants look on him as the Envoy of God. I told them what an interest he takes in their welfare. Chatham Dockyard has many articles of naval stores we want at Brest. Told the sailors how much the Chief Consul admires their courage, and how happy he would be to have such brave men in his service. The hills command Chatham and Rochester. At Canterbury there are many Jews and much silver plate.

5th. Set out for London; many good military stations. Shooter's Hill and Black Heath are well adapted for a camp. Greenwich-hill commands the Thames. Once here, London must fall. Arrived in Leicester Fields.

6th. Was visited by ——. "This man is full of capacity, and has even some notions of European politics. He has been in France, and preserves for our country a predominant sentiment of affection."

7th. I waited on Mr. Addington, and stared to hint my commercial mission. He is a man of mediocre talents; but he may be rendered useful.

8th. Went into the City. The tower is a place of no strength. Immense quantities of shipping, enormous warehouses, and great wealth. The division of which might enable each French General to live in splendour and luxury, purchasing chairs at a hundred louis each, and allowing his mistress as much every day. Saw a body of Stock brokers, and assured them of the sacred respect the French Government pays to poverty; shewed that if France and England were united in fraternal bonds, there would be no more wars, the national debt would no longer increase, and of course the funds would rise. The Stock-brokers declared their ardent affection for the First Consul, who, said they, holds in his hands the threads of our destiny. Viewed the Change, and explained to the Merchants how their trade would flourish if there were no longer a possibility of war taking place with France. The merchants muttered something in rather a discontented tone.

9th. Dined with Mr. —, and a number of his friends. Shewed them the Chief Consul's picture; they were each already possessed of it, and shewed it to me with expressions of the tenderest regard. I lamented that such friends of peace and good order were not at the head of Government, as they would preserve harmony between the two nations! With such men the Chief Consul would grant his mediation to England, as he has granted it to Switzerland. He would undertake the task of giving England a new constitution & of redressing all the grievances of the people.

10th. Went to Portsmouth. Wonderful naval arsenals, and charming ships of war. This town, and the arrondissement, are manifestly within the natural limits of France, for with Portsmouth France would be the mistress of the world which she is by nature destined to be. The sailors murmured when they saw me taking a plan of the fortifications. I complained to the commandant, and had them flogged. The fortifications, of which a plan is subjoined, may be carried in the way my plan points out. An army might land to the Eastward, &c. Must place a French commercial agent at Portsmouth.

12th, 13th, 15th, and 16th. Travelled along the coast westward. Many convenient bays for landing an army; minutely them all down, the foundings, the hills, the military posts. Plenty of corn, and cattle, which cannot be carried away. Weymouth! N. B. The king might be carried away from hence at the moment an army landed elsewhere. This would strike a great panic. Proclamations might be issued in his name, ordering the people to submit to the Grand Consul, who, in return, might appoint him one of the Maritime Prefects.

17. Arrived at Plymouth; fine harbours, roads, &c. noble ships of war, and inexhaustible maritime resources. This place, as well as Portsmouth, is unquestionably within the natural limits of France. Indeed, there cannot be a doubt that Portsmouth, Plymouth, Chatham, the Bank of England, and the river Thames, are within the natural boundaries of the French Republic. Lombard Street is within the natural limits of the Italian Republic, as its name denotes. As the British Parliament moved Malta into Europe, a decree of the Grand Consul would soon move all these places into France. The natural limits of Britain should be confined to the Welch mountains; thither all the Britons should retire, and leave what is called England to the French, whose territory it is, by right of the sword of William the Conqueror.

After taking plans of the fortifications of Plymouth, and making my remarks on the military stations of the country, I proceeded to Bristol, Bath, and Birmingham, in all of which I found the Chief Consul had admirers. At Nottingham, I was introduced to the heads of the city. I told them the Chief Consul wore no stockings but what were manufactured in their renowned city. At Sheffield I found throngs of admirers of the Envoy of God. I represented to them the interest the Chief Consul took in their manufactures of knives and forks, and the profound respect he entertained for their cutlers. They each presented me with some sharp instrument in token of their respect. We have many friends in Nottingham, and Sheffield, and must send commercial agents thither.

22. Arrived in Dublin and offered my good offices to the Lord Lieutenant to restore peace between the Government and the insurgents. He said he could not treat with rebels. He was very polite to me, and assured me how much he respected the Chief Consul. Went to Tipperary & Limerick, told the Insurgents the government would not make terms with them, and with a sigh assured them of the deep interest the Chief Consul took in their fate, the grief he felt at their oppressions, and his desire to spread among them an enlightened philosophy. They all declared to a man, they themselves under his thousand French troops. Visited all favourable for landing have many commercial especially in the mouth and the Bogs of Kildare.

FRIDAY, APRIL 29.

Letters from Port Republican, per the schooner Lyon, represent the political condition of that place as considerably ameliorated. The arrival of 4000 troops, and the establishment of General Rochambeau's headquarters there, together with the receipt of a large sum of specie, had greatly relieved the depression, which before was daily increasing. It was, however, apprehended, that unless additional reinforcements speedily arrived, the whole of the present crop of coffee would be lost in the plantations, in consequence of the want of hands to take it in.

DIED—on the 25th April, 1803. MRS ANN FENTON BRENT, wife of Daniel Carrol Brent, Esquire, of the City of Washington—Her conduct through life has spoken her panegyric.

"Each lonely scene shall thee restore,
"For thee the tear be duly shed;
"Belov'd till life could last no more,
"And mourn'd till pity's self be dead.

[The following is extracted from the National Aegis, a democratic paper, published in Worcester, Massachusetts.]

MASSACHUSETTS ELECTION.

No apology can be necessary for declining a further detail of the votes, given in on the first Monday in April. It would exhibit nothing but disappointment and defeat. Intelligence of this sort will reach our readers in due season, without the aid of newspaper authority. It would have yielded us much pleasure to have been the harbingers of better tidings. We have now only to recommend to them patience, resignation, and a steady perseverance in the ways of well doing.

It is difficult to decide, whether the event has happened from an unusual lassitude on the part of the republicans, or from an unprecedented industry and vigilance of the federal party. Whatever may be the cause, it is unquestionably true, we believe, that the federal majority, in Massachusetts, has increased since the last election.

Vaccination has become very popular in Spain, and several works in favor of it have appeared there. Don Diego de Bar-ces has published an 8vo. vol. which treats particularly of its introduction into Spain. His conclusion is drawn from 600 cases and are so favorable to the practice that he invites his Professional Brethren to extend it by every means in their power, and offers to supply them with matter fit for use gratis.

Dr. Don Pedro Hernandez has published an interesting work with four explanatory plates of which two editions have already appeared; his experiments were principally confined to Madrid, and he says that amongst some thousand infant patients, he does not know that one individual has suffered in the operation.

A person at Dunkirk lately brought an action against a man for pulling his Nose! In addition to the insult, the plaintiff complained that his Nose was rather too long before.

Died, in England, Mrs. Flaley, aged 102. But a very few days before her death, her sight was so strong as to see to pick up a small pin from the ground; and her hearing so perfect, as to comprehend every thing that was said to her.

A few handfuls of sea salt, mixed with about one quart of lime, to be used in white wash, will make it adhere to the wall and destroy insects.

ANECDOTE.—On the return of Gen. Hart, the Democratic Candidate for the place of Lieutenant Governor of Connecticut, from the festival at New Haven 9th March, he and some other of the Great Men of the party stopped at a tavern in Guilford for refreshment, where was capt. G—b, whom Gen. Hart did not know. Some conversation, however, being introduced, Gen. H. asked Capt. G. if he was at the Festival in New Haven; being answered in the affirmative, he asked captain G. if he ever before saw so large a procession? O yes, replied capt. G. with much good humour, I was once in Paris, and saw ten thousand persons marching with Robespierre at their head; I three days afterwards saw a similar mob bearing Robespierre's head on a pole!! Gen H. was abashed and walked away confounded with the sarcasm!

Heley Hutchinson, late Provost of Trinity College, and Father of Dublin, on his first introduction into the Irish Parliament, delivered a speech of considerable length on the rapid increase of the prosperity of Ireland. Counsellor Castello, a Member of the same Parliament, listened with great attention to the young orator's flowery declamation; and, when he had done, the Counsellor got up, and expressed the satisfaction he felt on hearing that his native country was in such a flourishing state. "When," added he, "that youthful Senator got up to speak, I had three halfpence in my pocket, and I am sure they must be three guineas now! Let me see." On which he put his hands into his pocket, pulled them out, and having looked at them for a moment, exclaimed, "Oh, by my f—l, they are halfpence still!"
